2. In September 1949, General Todor Toshev, then commander of 1 Army, ordered all units of 1 Army to take up positions in the Belasitsa Mountains (N 41-21, E 22-50) and to be ready for action on 28 September. On this date, General Toshev held a conference with his unit commanders at his headquarters in the Belasitsa Mountains and told the officers that he had received orders to attack Greece in order to help the Greek guerrillas to liberate the country. General Toshev gave the officers their orders for the attack which was to take place on the night of 28 September 1952.
3. Prior to the ending of this meeting, a DS (Dürzhavna Sigurnost; State Security) major and a DS captain arrived from Sofia and arrested General Toshev. The DS officers then ordered the unit commanders to return their units to their barracks within 24 hours.

4. When interrogated by the Dürzhavna Sigurnost in Sofia, General Toshev "confessed" that he had received the order to attack from General Kinov and General Trunski. It was planned that the 1 Army would enter Greek territory and from there, with the help of the Greek Army and the Americans, it would launch an attack on Bulgaria. At the same time, General Kinov and General Trunski and their followers would overthrow the regime.
5. Following General Toshev's confession, General Kinov, General Trunski, and many other Army officers were arrested and, at their trial in Sofia, they confessed concerning their activity to overthrow the regime. Following the trial many Army officers were arrested or discharged in 1950 and 1951. Generals Kinov, Trunski, and Toshev are now serving sentences at Sliven Prison.
